Lazell Tells Humanist Club "Something About Gardens"

Egypt Begins Gardening During Early Period; Artificial Terraces of Assyrians Develop Into Gardens

"One never grows too old to write something more about gardens. It is a subject as old as the world and nearly as wide." These introductory words were given by Prof. Fred J. Lazell of the school of Journalism in his paper, "Something About Gardens," which he read before members of the Humanist club yesterday at 8 p. m. at the home of Prof. Bartholow V. Crawford, 208 Richards street.

"Two interpretations of Moses' account of the Garden of Eden may be given," said Professor Lazell. "It was either a naive anthropomorphic account of the beginning of things or else Moses' narrative is symbolic and understandable only by the initiates of the philosophy of this time."

"In the Egyptian age of beauty and refinement the garden was the nobleman's paradise. Decorative features of old Egyptian ceilings and floors included the lotus flower, doves, butterflies, marsh grasses, swaying reeds, and gleaming water.

"The Assyrians," said Professor Lazell, "delighted in artificial hills and terraces, which later developed into park-like gardens surrounding the castles. The hanging gardens of Babylon are even today considered one of the seven wonders of the world. In Persia, a land of park gardens, and beautiful trees; the people were taught to reverence trees and were instructed in the art of planting them. The Hindus also worshipped trees.

"From Egypt, Greek, and ancient Roman times down through the middle ages, rigid formality dominated landscape gardening. This changed during the late Renaissance in the seventeenth century.

"The first gardens of England belonged to the monasteries. Later the garden grew up around the manor house which adopted the French style of strict formality. A revolt against this type of gardening began with Shattisbury and was taken up by Addison, Pope, and other leading writers of that day.

"Alexander Downing gave the beauty of English landscape gardening to the United States. He gave inspiration to Frederick Law Olmsted, who designed Central park in New York, N. Y. Boston, with its Franklin park, Arnold Arboretum, and the Ave is noted for its beautiful parks. Chicago shows great promise of future loveliness with its park drive begun in 1910. Its rose garden designed by Jens Jensen, and its status by Lorado Taft.

"The great work of Alexander Downing," concluded Professor Lazell, "points the way."

H. J. Thornton Talks to Philo Club About College and Culture

"Creation of the character of 'Babbitt' was enough to win the Nobel prize for Sinclair Lewis. 'Babbitt' has been confused with democracy of action, and it is considered ideal to adopt a 'mucker' pose," Prof. H. J. Thornton of the history department told Philo club Sunday evening in the river room of Iowa Union.

Speaking on "College and Culture," Professor Thornton said that mere exposure to college should be sufficient to imbue students with culture, not of an intellectual snobbery type, but of a refinement marked by physical perfection, commendable action, personal behavior, and polished speech.

"It is not enough for a student merely to secure a degree; he ought to acquire a personality, too," Professor Thornton said.

PICK A GIFT WIN A PRIZE

Rules of "Pick a Gift" Contest

THE RULES ARE SIMPLE! Anyone of any age may enter except employees of The Daily Iowan or their immediate family. There's fun for everyone!

In each box on this page appears the name of an Iowa City Merchant. Look over the names—get to know them. Then sometime during the remainder of this week including next Sunday's paper, each merchant on this page will insert a separate advertisement in which you will find an item, a telephone number, or a statement marked CONTEST ITEM—remember this marking "CONTEST ITEM" will always appear beneath the item in question.

When you find this item, print or write it neatly on the proper box under the merchant's name on this page. Be sure and find the correct items. Some merchants will run several ads, but remember only one of them will carry an item marked "CONTEST ITEM." Look carefully!

This is the first page. There will be two more pages—one on each Tuesday for the next two weeks. Each merchant will have an ad carrying a "CONTEST ITEM" each week. These are the three that you are to fill out. Do not send your pages in separately, but mail them all at one time to the "Pick a Gift Contest Editor" of this newspaper so that they are in his hands by not later than 6 p.m. Thursday, December 18. Prizes and winners will be announced in The Daily Iowan Friday morning, December 19.

Accuracy is the primary basis on which awarding of prizes will be given. Cleverness and neatness in arrangement, coloring or decorating the page will also be considered in determining the winners. You do not have to be an artist. Just use the page as you find it here. Do not make copies. Duplicate prizes will be made in case of ties. Only one award will be given any entrant. The decision of the Contest Editor is final.

Wells Takes First Cut at Little Hawks

Fifty eager faces watched Coach George Wells intently as he read the names of the Iowa City high school case aspirants who were retained after the first cut of the Little Hawk squad. Next week the present crew of 22 will be slashed to 16 and the real work will be under way.

After Wells cut the squad he picked two teams and had them scrimmage for a short period. Then a rest was called after which scrimmaging was resumed. Nothing of importance was noted out of the cage as they dashed around the floor. Tomorrow afternoon will see plays and fundamentals stressed by the Little Hawk mentor.

The locals meet Lone Tree in the Iowa City high gymnasium in the first game of the season Friday. After the Lone Tree game comes a series of hard contests in the Mississippi Valley conference which will give local basketball fans plenty of interesting tilts to watch.

Those who are at present on the squad are: Stimmel, Vestermark, Wright, Van der Zee, Miller, Curry, Burr, R. Barwick, K. Barwick, Brown, Soucek, Ersland, Ellis, Walters, Chapman, Austin, Reddick, Sulek, Dick, Yetter, Reed, and McCreery.

The rest of the 50 are to report Saturday morning at 9 for a three hour session that will be continued throughout the season. Wells is also attempting to arrange one evening a week for the "B" squad to work.

High School Champ Spurs on Wrestlers

Contenders for the 115 pound championship of the university received an added incentive to work with the entrance of Thomas Stevens, Cherokee freshman, yesterday. Stevens won the state high school 115 pound title in 1927 and again in 1929. He displayed plenty of speed and strength in his workout last night and should go far in the tourney. Twenty of the 23 men entered in the tournament reported at practice last night. With the exception of a few who are slightly overweight, the squad looked fit, and by Dec. 5, opening day of the tournament, should be in the pink.

McConnell Second Monmouth Casualty

MONMOUTH, Ill., Dec. 1.—(AP)—Football caused two deaths within the ranks of Monmouth's eleven this fall. Bob Sharpe, center on the team, died several weeks ago of blood poisoning which was caused by a light football shoe. Sunday, Stanley McConnell, star Monmouth fullback, died from a broken neck suffered in the Thanksgiving day game against Knox. McConnell, a senior from Amesworth, Iowa, was injured during a big Monmouth rally in the third period of the game against Knox. With his team losing by one touch down, McConnell disregarded the frozen turf and smashed his way repeatedly for long gains. On the final thrust, good for 14 yards, he was tackled fairly but his neck was broken. He lived until Sunday.

Sportively Speaking

By Bill Rutledge

Purdue did a sensible thing in abolishing 10 minor sports for this year and probably next. Not that the act was sensible in itself but that it was sensible to slash the sport program rather than run the athletic department into debt.

There is no cause for alarm regarding the lesser sports at Iowa. Track, baseball, wrestling, golf, tennis, swimming, gymnastics, cross country are firmly rooted here.

Intercollegiate competition at Purdue, as in most of our nation's universities, is dependent upon football receipts for its sustenance. The burden was more than this year's holdermaker eleven could bear. Grid income fell off $97,000.

Director of athletics N. A. Kellogg attributed the decrease in net football earnings to the current business slump.

Undoubtedly the business depression has been the prime factor. But despite the depression certain teams continued to pack their amphitheat-ers and the books of many of the smaller colleges are showing large profits. The country was in the throes of poor business conditions all summer, yet baseball patronage showed a marked increase in many cities.

The expulsion of Iowa last year, on the basis of charges the subsequent Carnegie report No. 23 showed to be widespread, greatly lessened public esteem for Big Ten athletics.

The refusal of the faculty committee to sanction the Northwestern-Notre Dame game for charity has served to further alienate the affection of fans for college sport shows.

Northwestern enjoyed unparalleled grid prosperity this autumn. Its team was acknowledged to be the cream of the conference. Its huge stadium was filled to overflowing for more than one home game.

Of all the Big Ten universities it would seem that the Willits would have the least to be nettled concerning the continuance of grid popularity. Yet the Daily Northwestern in editorials this fall has repeatedly expressed its conviction of an ominous outlook as to the future of football. The Purple publication sees the doom of the modern college grid game.

Our magazines have resounded with funeral tunes for football for the last several years. The venomous pen-

John R. Tunis particularly has as so-called college football.

The crux of these harsh indictments is the "amateur" player. Some contend that grid performers are being subsidized and thus are not amateurs. Others assert that players should be allowed certain compensations. Still others lament the exploitation of players by coaches for their own profit. Some claim that football is overemphasized in college.

Fencers, Cloggers Start Practicing on Foils, Fancy Steps

At least two corners of the field-house will resound in the future to the rhythmic tapping of feet and the clash of naked steel on naked steel since the beginning of the classes yesterday and today in the popular winter sports of clogging and fencing by the sophomores in the men's physical education division.

Ernest G. Schroeder, director of physical education, will have charge of the fencing classes. There is plenty of equipment and 30 men can be taken care of at one time. Although this sport is no longer varsity, a tournament is held each year to pick the best swordsman of the university.

At the head of the clogging class is Aaron Kipnes, a man of many years experience in his line. He is expecting 125 men to register. The course taught is the waltz clog and by the end of the year the students will be able to give a complete dance and an encore. This is the second year of the work and an exhibition will probably be given between halves of a basketball game later in the season as was done by the best tappers last year. In addition to the elementary classes there is also one for advanced men.

First Year Baseball Men Start Thursday

Freshmen winter baseball practice will get under way Thursday at 4 p. m. at which time Assistant Coach "Tommy" Thompson will meet all infielders and outfielders. Practice will be held Monday, Thursday and Friday at 4 p. m. until after the holidays, when a new schedule will be announced.

No work will be given battery men until after vacation as Coach Vogel wishes to look the men over carefully and get a good line on the

At the time the members of the squad will elect a captain to take charge of the team on the field and direct its play through the battles next fall. Harrison "Bud" Wright, fullback, is the retiring captain.

Mae Tinee Praises a Mighty Epic

★★★★ (Four Stars Is Highest Rating)

By Mae Tinee Good Morning!

What a long, long trail that WAS, a-winding to the land of the pioneers' dreams! And how admirably Raoul Walsh, in "The Big Trail," has caught the spirit that inspired the treks of our ancestors and impelled their covered wagons over the peril and hardship infested prairies and mountains of early days! Here is a picture to reckon with! A picture to thrill the soul, delight the eye, and give a fillip to the patriotism of the most caviling observer!

Against a background of grand and impressive scenery a caravan wends its way from Missouri toward the setting sun. It is composed of thousands of humans, herds of cattle, horses, mules, dogs and the huge, lumbering canvas covered wagons, which are all the homes the adventurers will know for months and months.

There are a lot of things about "The Big Trail" that you'll remember a long time! The storm, the fording of racing rivers, the descent down a sheer mountain side—during which ordeals man and beast gallantly undergo the most terrific hardships—will remind you of some of the episodes in "Gross." You'll laugh at the predicaments of El Brendel and his sitting mule. You'll wish the worst to the villains, impersonated by Tyrone Power, Charles Stevens and Ian Keith; long to hug Tully Marshall who plays a grand old scout; enjoy Marguerite Churchill and her film family, and, I'm sure, thoroughly approve of young John Wayne, who makes his screen debut as Breck Coleman. He's so much like Gary Cooper that sometimes you almost think he IS Gary Cooper.

In making this picture the director never once descended to heroics. He has screened Hal Everts' story with the simplicity that is power. Men, animals, wagons (which last do not, as was the case in "The Covered Wagon," retain snowy canvas tops from train's beginning to trail's end) are REAL to you. The sweep of landscapes, filmed in the Teton mountains, Idaho; Yellowstone Park, Klamath Falls, Ore.; Sequoia National Park in the Sierra Nevadas, Montana, and some of the photographic shots—the buffalo stampede, for example—make you catch your breath. The sound is splendid. There's no more dialogue than is necessary, and what's there counts. The golden thread of romance gleams continuously and charmingly against the sterner stuff of the drama. Never do suspense or interest lag.

Behind The Scenes IN HOLLYWOOD

By HARRISON CARROLL
HOLLYWOOD, Cal. — Reversing the usual order of things, Hollywood's professional athletes are complaining about the invasion of amateurs.

One of the prominent motion picture stunt men charges that local aquatic stars are providing cut-rate thrills for film producers. The ordinary water skimmer, for which stunt men receive $25 a day are being done by amateurs for $10 a day, he declares.

Another charge is that a amateur recently did a 94-foot dive for $75. The stunt would bring $250 to a professional, it is said.

Most of the stunt men in Hollywood have an understanding about prices. They may underbid each other, but the difference will not be a substantial amount.

If the asserted invasion of amateurs continues, stunt men are threatening an exposure of the cut-rate chance-takers.

A NASTY CYNIC
A local writer wittingly observes: "If a Hollywood film magazine bought the apple cart, he'd substitute watermelons for production value."

MARY ASTOR SIGNED
The girl in R-K-O's picture, "Private Secretary," will be played by Mary Astor, who continues her successful career in the talkies.

This story by Carey Wilson relates the ingratitude of a young salesman who is boosted by his secretary to a general-managership, and who then forgets all about her. Mel Brown is direct.

"Private Secretary" is only one of the business romances that are following in the wake of First National's very successful film, "The Office Wife."

DRAT THE CHILD
One of Hollywood's little tragedies took place today in front of the Fox studio.

A hopeful mother was leading her one eye lamb across the street to interview a director.

Just as she stepped for the curb, the child slipped and fell into the muddy gutter.

Such language! And from a mother!

REJECT WESTERNERS
A poll of exhibitors has resulted in the postponement of "Saint Johnson," which Universal had planned to make as one of the important films on this year's program.

The public, say the exhibitors, is growing cool toward Westerns. Other studios figure differently as "Cimarron" and "Fighting Caravans" are listed among the specials of R-K-O and Paramount.

In all likelihood, "Saint Johnson" will be made next year, according to officials at the U.
